Remarkable Case of Conjugal Disagreement Before Judge Valliant of the Circuit Court—Two Wives Who Refused to Leave Home to Follow Their Husbands to Other Places.

They were both young, pretty and unassuming, that crowd in the court room was staring at them. The severe lines on Judge Valliant's tired face curved up into an expression of kindly interest as they were called forward by Attorney William N. Woerner to take seats on the witness chairs. The younger was Mrs. Grace Henry, the wife of Randolph J. Henry, a well known traveling man of St. Louis. She was suing him for divorce on the ground of intemperance, and as he had made no answer to her petition the case was put among those which go by default, the applicant getting the divorce as a matter of course, later telling a story on the witness stand that seems reasonable to the Judge. The other lady with Mrs. Henry was Mrs. Julia Steinmetz, her sister. Both were under 25, dressed alike in well fitting camels hair gowns, neat gloves and showy and tiny bonnets. They were put on the stand one after the other by Attorney Woerner, gave their evidence in low tones distinctly audible only to the Judge and the lawyer, and then left the court room. The decree of divorce was granted in 1885.

As the testimony of the two ladies went, Mrs. Henry's story was that she had been married to Mr. Henry, who was a traveling man, for three years. They had been living with Mrs. J. B. Packer, the mother of Mrs. Henry, who has a comfortable house on 27th Washington avenue. Mrs. Henry was traveling on Washington avenue, but the two ladies said she contributed very little to his wife's support, and after a short time she noticed that his affection for her was waning. One afternoon in 1885, three years after they had been married, Mrs. Henry was sitting in her parlor, looking over a newspaper, when an expressman left a bundle at the house for Mrs. Henry. The man said he had first taken a note to Mr. Henry, but he had not come home, and the note was produced in court. It was:

A SHOCKING DISCOVERY.
One pair stockings.
One pair kid gloves.
Three handkerchiefs.
One skirt.
Eleven napkins.
Two chemises.
One powder and one chamomile.
One curling iron.
This was not all. In the bundle was a letter and a telegram, which the two ladies said they recognized as Mr. Henry's. The telegram was signed "Jack," and the letter was signed "Jack." This Jack was a master of the language of gallantry, and he had written a letter to Mrs. Henry, in which he told her that he was going to leave her, and that he was going to marry another woman. Mrs. Henry said that she was shocked and distressed by this letter, and that she had shown it to Mr. Henry. Mr. Henry said that he had written the letter, and that he was going to leave her, and that he was going to marry another woman. Mrs. Henry said that she was shocked and distressed by this letter, and that she had shown it to Mr. Henry. Mr. Henry said that he had written the letter, and that he was going to leave her, and that he was going to marry another woman.

THE END OF THE MATTER.
A short time after that a girl not over 18 came to Mrs. Henry, and told her that she was going to leave her, and that she was going to marry another man. Mrs. Henry said that she was shocked and distressed by this news, and that she had shown it to Mr. Henry. Mr. Henry said that he had written the letter, and that he was going to leave her, and that he was going to marry another woman. JOHN McCLANEY FRACTURED EDWARD LEWIS' SKULL IN A FIGHT.

There was an Old Grudge Between the Boys—Lewis Taken to the Hospital and McCLANEY Arrested—Private Watchman Richard Pickett Robbed—Hold for Horse Stealing—Police News.

John McCLANEY and Edward Lewis, bell boys at the Southern Hotel, quarreled in the basement 12-10 today and McCLANEY struck Lewis with a brick in the forehead. The injured man fell unconscious to the ground. Officer Goetz, who was on duty in the hotel at the time, was promptly summoned, and he placed Lewis under arrest. He called the patrol wagon, and Lewis, who was badly wounded, was taken to the hospital. McCLANEY was taken to the City Hospital.

The trouble occurred in the yard near the store room immediately after Lewis and McCLANEY went off watch. The two young men had been on bad terms for some time, it appears, and had some weapons. McCLANEY, it appears, was a brick, and Lewis was a brick. Lewis was taken to the hospital, and McCLANEY was taken to the City Hospital.
